Ancient Buildings in Fujian is a veritable collection of all kinds of historical architecture in Fujian. It is a combination of old and new, ranging from the main hall of Hualin Temple in Fuzhou, the oldest wooden structure in southern China with a history of more than a thousand years, to modern buildings on Kulangsu of the late 19th and early 20th centuries; and it is a display of key concepts of traditional Chinese culture together with folk beliefs of rich diversity, visualized in Confucian temples and academies of classical learning, as well as Mazu temples, Qingshuiyan Temple and Tzu Chi temples. There are also former distinctive official residences, such as those in Three Lanes and Seven Alleys, and unique earthen dwellings lived in by Hakka families, in addition to all sorts of ancestral halls, mansions, temples of Buddhism and Taoism as well as mosques, chapels and churches. All these historical buildings tell the development of Fujian culture as an important part of Chinese culture and its diversity as a local one.
