This book is a historical novel, which mainly focuses on the period from the publication of Youth Magazine in 1915 to the time when New Youth became the official publication of the Communist Party of China in 1921. The book takes the legendary stories of Li Dazhao, Chen Duxiu and Hu Shi and their different life paths as the basic narrative line, supplemented by the rough experiences of revolutionary youths in their pursuit of truth. The book artistically reproduces a period of surging years of pursuing truth and burning ideals performed by China's advanced elements and a group of passionate young people a hundred years ago, and profoundly reveals the historical inevitability of the combination of Marxism and the Chinese workers' movement and the establishment of the Communist Party of China. It's a fine masterpiece dedicated to the centenary of the founding of the party and serving the study and education of party history.

Someday, somewhere, a little boy and a little goat met and never separated. They built a house, lived inside and grew up together. It seems to be a very small world. However, as we read on, it gets larger. The stories were told through the boy's first-person narrating voice. How many little goats are there on earth? Time slows down as we follow the eyes and voice of the boy and learn about everything in a new way.

This book was selected by "2022 White Ravens Selection of the International Youth Library" in Germany.
