This book is a collection of eight works of fiction and one work of non-fiction. Of the eight pieces of fiction included in this book, six are realistic and two are modern fables with science fiction overtones. Their real themes point to problems faced by people in their daily life with musings on the future of mankind. The last non-fiction piece, Overseas Relations, traces the author's personal experience of a relative's return from overseas from a novelist's perspective and narrative; at the same time, it fictionalizes the relative's bumpy experience of being adrift abroad based on historical materials, and seeks to refract the history of Shanghai and China in the past hundred years with the family story. This is a collection of Chinese-style "Black Mirror" stories. Each story begins with a devious, crazy idea, capturing the bright and shiny web of life and meaning that people weave amidst hallucinations, obsessions, and pain.
